Hack The World Speaker Information

AN INTRODUCTION:

Hello, my name is Michael, creator of Hack The World and the parent community NeuralWorks.

I am writing on behalf of my community NeuralWorks, a global community created by students to connect with like-minded people and work on meaningful projects that solve problems. As a participant in numerous hackathons, I found it extremely beneficial for learning and meeting new people. This is why I have decided to create HTW.

What is Hack The World?
HTW is a completely virtual international hackathon organised by students, for students. This hackathon was created to promote technical innovation and highlight students skills and abilities. We are looking for speakers like you to help excel HTW and make it as great as possible!

Michael, NeuralWorks.

Problems We Are Solving

LOCATION
We want to prove that you can make projects with anyone around the world. We are a team that have never met, a team from 6 continents. We want to prove that hackathons can be created from anywhere and that timezones do not limit success. Anyone can create great events, not just high-school/college associated groups.

DIVERSITY
We also want to maximise the number of participants we can reach. We have seen a real issue with a lack of African participants and look to change this. To solve this problem, we have taken on board organisers with ties to certain African tech communities, who can help reach these corners that would otherwise go untapped.

THE BEST EXPERIENCE
Finally, we want to create the best user experience possible. As fellow hackers, we have experienced many different hackathons and have realised that although hackathons are great, they have the opportunity to be so much better. We have decided to take the best ideas and combine them to make the experience as great as possible. This includes improving the infamous hackathon judging system, creating a more inclusive and friendly environment for beginners, and finally creating a stronger relationship between hackers and sponsors.

Meet The Team

Due to our objective of creating the most diverse hackathon yet, our Hack The World team should represent this! We are a team that includes 5 continents and numerous different fields of education.
